

Media Statement Regarding Current State of Texas' Midstream Sector
Thure Cannon, president of the Texas Pipeline Association
September 1, 2017

Along with state, local and federal regulatory agencies, TPA member companies are working hard to ensure against any disruption of oil and gas distribution brought on by Hurricane Harvey. The industry is also working closely with Gulf Coast refineries to make sure we are ready to serve when they come back on-line. There is no shortage of gasoline in Texas, but some shortages at the pumps have been caused by increased consumer consumption.

TPA is committed to the safety, security and integrity of Texas' pipeline infrastructure. As always, the midstream community, along with the rest of Texas' oil and gas industry, continually strives to meet the ever-growing demand for our state's abundant supply of oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids.
